What should the Treasure Valley's future look like? Survey asks for input

The Community Planning Association of SW Idaho, also known as COMPASS, released a survey to see how residents envision the future.

The ‘Where do we grow from here?’ Survey is open to all Treasure Valley residents and is broken down into three categories: values, future scenarios and implementation.

“It’s no secret – Ada and Canyon Counties are growing! COMPASS forecasts there will be 1,075,000 people living in the two counties by the year 2050.” The survey notes on the first page and asks participants to consider: “Where will they live, work, and play?”

[Growing valley, growing roads: $767 million earmarked for 143 road projects: what’s up near you]

The survey features different transportation and development scenarios and asks participants to rate them.

“Do these scenarios reflect your vision for the future of the Treasure Valley? What issues are most important to you?” COMPASS Principal Planner Carl Miller asked.

Each scenario includes different options for housing and transportation in both urban and suburban areas. The survey shows how each scenario will impact affordability, location choice, environmental health, outdoor lifestyle and growth management.

COMPASS notes that this survey was built around the results from its first survey released last fall.

You can take the current survey here.

BoiseDev is the area’s only locally-owned commercial news outlet. Your support will help us cover more stories and bring you more vital information. Become a member today!

RELATED

GROWTH
Ada may add new impact fees for growth in county and cities

GROWTH
Meridian considers revamping development process: neighborhood meetings, signage – and waiting for ACHD

GROWTH
What will the Treasure Valley’s future look like? Planning agency wants your vision